My hope is that he's doing some crazy devil's advocate for a philosophy class to get the students to think and use philosophical principles to show why he's wrong. If he's expressing his honest opinions though... that's insane

I hate to agree, as ideally, we should all be judged as individuals. Being prejudged is unfair, and I'm speaking from experience.

Still...we see the same patterns over and over again, don't we?

I think he's exploring the question of why sexual activity is put in a separate category from other activities. Judeo-Christian values have imposed this idea on us. It's a legitimate question for a philosopher to ponder.
